The majority of Americans will encounter poverty. 76% will have spent at least one year below 150% of the official poverty line by the time they reach age 75.⁴

- Poverty has often been understood by the U.S. public as something that happens to others. Yet by looking across the adult life span, we can see that poverty touches a clear majority of the population.⁴
- We don't all start on a level playing field. Differences in parental incomes and resources exert a major influence over children's ability to acquire valuable skills and education. These differences in human capital will, in turn, strongly influence how well children compete in the labor market, and therefore help to determine the extent of their economic success during the course of their lives.⁴
- Poverty can cause chronic stress which can affect many areas of life including physical health.
 - People in problem debt are three times as likely to have thought about suicide in the past year. There is rarely one single factor that drives people to take their own life. Instead, typically, a range of social issues, life events, cognitive and personality factors are combined. However, there is a strong link between problem debt and suicide.⁷
- Poverty affects us all. It affects taxes, children, schools, friends, businesses, employees, coworkers, crime, drugs, community, housing values, neighborhoods, healthcare systems, utility costs, county funding, etc.
